Synopsis of Previous Chapters.

David Rylance, late Beutenant in the British Army in Bouth Africa, upon his servival in Leeds, England, where his sixer lives, finds her in a dying condition through want. This, atthough he has left his uncle, John Isibiter, sufficient funds for the girl's 'maintensoce. His uncle tells him that he, Isbiter, is a ruined man, after which he kills himself. Rylance, suspected of murdering him, is sought for by the police. Because of his sought for by the police. sister's bedeide and finally persuades him to fly.

Rylance sails from Liverpool for America on the trainp ship Beowulf, and lands at the Island of Orienzs, in the St. Lawrence river. Even there he finds the vilinge sheriff posting on a heard in front of the courthouse his picture and a notice of reward offered for his capture. He makes arrangements to beard at the house of one Jean Bregaut, who lives with his daughter Anne. That night Bregaut robs Rylance of all his money and his Victoria Cross, and also stealing from his daughter, escapes from the island. Rylance agrees to live as foreman at the Bregaut farm under the direction of Anne. The village usurer, Pancosst, holds a mortrage on the place, and Anne and Rylance do their best to make money from the farm to pay off the mortrage. Things go at a fair rate till suddenly Rylance sees Ward, a Leeds detective, prowding round the Island. Evidently the latter is after the Cricket of Leeds.

you." A friend whom I have never seen!"
"Tom Ridgeley's sister."
Rylance's brow contracted, and, with a muttered exclamation, he arose.
"I can stand no more of this, Kirk-wood," he muttered. "One of us is mad."

The evidence of your sister's marrage is incontrovertible," said Kirkwood. "It has been proved, too, that as her husband died before she died, she had a dower right in the estate."

Rylance, again sinking into his chair, gazed at the speaker blankly. Kirkwood went on.

"Let me go back a little bit. That Ridgeley charge was, of course, the most serious of all that were made most serious of all that were made

"Let me go back a little bit. That Ridgeley charge was, of course, the most serious of all that were made against you. As hardly as you may think of me afterward, I must tell you that for several weeks I thought you committed the deed. Three months after you left, however, the light began to break.

"Old Ross, the superintendent of the Leeds police, hatling me as he did for letting you go, came to me one day while I was in prison. He had found some letters you had left behind you in your room. One, which was unsigned, was identified as having been written by the hand of Ridgeley. This directed you to meet him at the mill. Ross obtained from Ridgeley's mother permission to go through the papers of her son. Ross was completely staggered by what he found.

"Three months before the death of Mary Rylance, Ridgely, representing himself as a single man, had wed a young woman to whom he had been payling considerable attention. He was a bigamist."

and told her that by the time the letter reached her hands he would have slain the man who had threatened to make the exposure and that he himself would be dead by his own hand.

"The significance of the broken rope attacked to the handcuffs was then appreciated. It was seen that, after successfully defending yourself from his assault, you had succeeded in getting Quillan's darbies on him and had tied him to the bfg steam pipe that extended through the room from floor to celling. After you left he broke away and hurled himself through the window, failing into the waters of the Aire.

"You, not knowing of his death, then Mer! Ward had left the room he had When Ward had left the room he had closed the door behind him, but for the last three or four minutes it had been ajar. As Kirkwood glanced toward it now it moved farther open and a woman entered-a stately wonf an, with blue, lustrous eyes, and a great mass of shining light brown har. She was pale and trembling, and there were tears upon her cheeks, but as Thes-morely as your representative—that's all. You'll have to foot the bill, and I'm afraid it will cost you a pretty penny. You have only yourself to blame, however. If you hadn't acted the part of a Frenchman so well when Ward was in Basilton—"

"He was working in your-in my interest, then, at the time I met him in Basilton?"

"Yes."

She was pale and trembling, and there were tears upon her cheeks, but as she smiled there come to her cleaks, but as she smiled there come to her cleaks. Clasped in one of her white, outstretched hands was something from which depended a stained scarlet ribbon.

It was the woman that poor Mary Rylance had so often tried to see in her dreams.

As Hylance folded her in his arms no word was spoken, and Kirkwood, step-

"He was working in your—in my interest, at the time I met him in Hasilton".

Rylance sank back in his chair and passed a trembling hand over his face. "Had you allowed ward to take you then, you would have hard form $10,000 to $20,000—the amount that from $10,000 to $20,000—the amount that stages of the forts to find you will cost," said Kirkwood.

"But you—you I thought you were in prison."

"I was, but they let me out."
Rylance looked at him with puzzled eyes.

"You think $10,000 was too much for the work?"

"Oh! no; and before the world is it, but and the passed on The woman was Therese. Grasping Ward by the sieve, Kirkwood it, but and the passed on The woman was freeze.

"You will pay?" he exclaimed.

"Why, yes. Up in the Klondike I didn't do as well as some of the other chaps I knew. But I made a little strike that landed me about $10,000; R. Kirkwood's face grew longer, and there was a queer, trembling movement of his lips. He paused, then, leaning forward with elbows on his knees, he looked with elbows on his knees, he looked with elbows on his knees, he looked and the strike that landed me about $10,000; R. For him who hath!" Rylance exclaimed.

"Yes. Your uncle, John Isbister, really was a long-headed man, after all, as certain events have proved. The stock him is glite-dage now. His debts have all been liquidated, and his holdings and those in your name are worth most than $10,000,000.

"Yes. Your sister, Your sister's of her death."

Rylance rose slowly to a sitting posture, and those in your name are worth most than $10,000,000.

Rirkwood, ward strike his paper, we had a suddenly lost their luster. He did not speak, and several moments later, with a dark cloud on his face, he sank hack again.

Kirkwood, watchling him apprehensive-ly, went on:

"It was because I knew that, if you were still alive, this f nis attitude indicated that he was peering at something in the street below.

Darting a quick, questioning look at (irkwood, Ward strode quickly across o the kneeling man.

"Pancoast." he called, here was no "Has he fainted again?" Ward asked.

"No."
Ward turned a pair of horror-stricken eyes upon his friend. Then, after a long pause, he said in an awed voice:
"He was looking out when you came across the street with Rylance, and the shock—"I suppose so." Kirkwood sighed.

"And so our friend, the Cricket, was right, after all, when he said that when he met his wife again he would have cleaned his slate."

(The End.)

paying considerable attention. He was a bigamist."

Kirkwood paused and looked thoughtfully at the floor. Rylance's gaze was riveted on his face.

"Ward went to this young woman and found that, despite the fact that she knew the terrible charge that had been made against an innocent manshe had failed to give to the police a letter that would clear up the mystery of the young mans death. In this letter Ridgelez confessed how he had wronged her.

"He also told her that Mary Rylance's brother had said that unless he acknowledged his first murriage he would reveal circumstances that had to do with the performance of the ceremon's teenth street northwest, at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, with the Rev. ### STOCK MARKET IS AT STANDSTILL AWAITING ELECTION AND EUROPEAN NEWS.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—On the eve of election and with new developments in Europe over which there is almost as much speculation as there is over the election in the United States, the market, today was very quiet. The active stocks held fairly well, and the general tone through the thin trading was firm. Union gained fractionally: Steel lost \( \frac{1}{2} \) a point after the opening, and \( \frac{1}{2} \), from Friday's close, and Reading was down around \( \frac{1}{2} \) a point. Canadian Pacitic reflected foreign nervousness, opening as point off and losing another point and a half by noon. Beet Sugar took a tumble of nearly 5 points, on the belief, it is reported, that Wilson will be elected. Copper was off a point. There was little doing in the specialties. Further losses by the banks in their surplus reserve also tends to restrict trading.

The London market showed little change, though the active stocks were losses that there is understood to the provious two weeks, making a total net shortage of nearly $0,000 cars. The Interstate Commerce Commission says that there will be a car famine unless great care is taken, and suggests a higher per diem rate, faster trains, and more rigid inspection. The net earnings of the Denver and Rio Grande in September were $20,906, an increase of $10,000 freight and Paris have passed with the previous two weeks, making a total net shortage of nearly $0,000 cars. The later was like per diem rate, faster trains, and more rigid inspection. The net earnings of the Denver and Rio Grande in September were $20,906, an increase of $10,000 freight and Paris have passenger cars, which will call for about $400,000 tons of steel. It is likely that these orders will be placed this year. Inquiries are also out for 200 locomotives.
